Local Merchants Present Latest Novelties in Styles of Feminine Dress.

AWNING STRIPED CLOTH IN THE NEW SPORT SUITS

Complete Array of Weaves From All Quarters of Globe, Including American Products.

All the stores in Washington in their windows and on their display shelves are now illustrating that local merchants have not only secured every fashion which European brains and looms have managed to evolve, but, reaching beyond the red zones, have gathered strange, new fabrics from those farther stretches which we call the four corners of the globe. And to these war-won treasures are added such a splendid range of made-in-America weaves that what hitherto to be a colorless season has blossomed into a piquancy of form and hue.

One establishment is featuring the new sport suits of awning striped cloth. While the central figure is attired in a skirt of barely inch-wide violet and white striped crash—sport coat of all-over violet and hat of purple straw—the natty young wax lady seated near is delightfully conspicuous in regulation awning stripes of tan and white, topped with a small, prettily ribbon-banded sailor of Panama braid. Other natty young wax ladies similarly attired, except for individually colored awning stripes—blue, pink and green—give authority for the assurance that the sport suit is to contribute jaunty liveliness to the coming summer.

More Daring Combinations.

Other and more daring combinations of cotton colors come in broad tri-color stripes of pink, green and black or any three shades fancy may select, all to be made with boyish simplicity for the girl young enough to wear untripped little coats and skirts as plain as the proverbial pipe stem. American looms also are introducing every lovely field flower on a ground of white voile, which seems, somehow, to have ousted the old-time indispensable lawn.

For the woman who likes the novelty of something sartorially new under the sun the stores are introducing "silver bloom," a fabric warranted to wash like a handkerchief, wear like buckskin and look like finest silk, a strictly earthly standpoint, seems too good to be true. Importations include wonderful dyes in Syrian and Thracian crepes, Asphodel and other wonder-weave silks, and again of frankly garish plaids and definitely wide stripes of mellow blues and cinnamon and red.

An inspection of leading stores here proves that some of the futurists' fashions are still limited to the printed confines of the colored page. The widest skirts seen here do not average over three yards—many are much narrower—and though the ordinary walking suit may have its folds or peplum, the plain and well cut jacket is still supreme and often the general effect. Any little extravagance of fancy holds good in the afternoon dress and dancing frock.

Old-time drastic limitations to cut and dried lines no longer hamper the woman who aims to dress well.

Reminder of Old Times.

It looks like old times to see the silk petticoat flaunting its vanities in the foreground of the new season's styles. At a G street store where ultra fashion prevails a peach pink model is trimmed with seven rows of tiny ruffles from bottom to hip. Each is headed by a silk-covered cable cord—the effect producing a blushing hint of infatuation which may—or may not—prove advance agent for the long-threatened hoop.

The stocking purse has developed into a working model. One in an F street store carried its woven-in, flap-covered, rivet-stopped bank on the substantial hem, and was quite roomy enough to hold a couple of nickels and, say, a diamond.

The leghorn flat, which the one-time Empress Eugenie declared to be the loveliest hat that could be produced, and which lost its supremacy when the Panama came along, has returned to its long-observed splendor. An F street store on 7th street has caught this royal straw blown back by fashion's whim, and is showing many models.

Feminine Interest in the Blouse.

Feminine taste may have its variations as to hats and gowns, but the sex, to a woman, is vitally interested in the blouse, whether pronounced "shirt waist" or "blouse." And the blouses this spring are worthy of the high place they fill in woman's esteem. Practically they are the same in cut as the winter's official models—long sleeved, buttoned at the neck with the flaring collar that forms the desired V. The newness lies mainly in the ethereal fabrics that come with geometric crepe in the lead.

The new surprise collar, in many models, extends at each end to a dainty bit of a flap. On one is a button. The other shows a buttonhole. It can be worn open or fastened across the throat. In the latter case the neck is hidden, but the charm of lace and frill gives to the face a softening touch which the grim linen collar never even claimed to supply.

A mere show-window pilgrimage along the center shopping section, down Market space way and up 7th street, proves that present-day styles are not the reminiscent of every uniform of every nation now at war, including Mexico's sombrero, but that they reflect, in some more or less illusory fashion, the history of the world. With all the gathered treasures, however, Egyptian scarfs, Greek draperies, gold wrought tissues of the orient, sturdy Irish linens, barbaric jewels and the finest weaves from the looms of all Europe, it is a game bet that the awning-striped sport suit will have the right of way.

Dr. Thomas H. McKeown, forty-five years, a veterinary inspector of the bureau of animal industry, quarantine division, died last night in Petersburg, Va., from injuries received yesterday afternoon when a tire blew out, causing the automobile in which he was driving to overturn. Dr. McKeown was pinned beneath his car and his skull was fractured. The accident happened on the Cox turnpike about ten miles west of Petersburg.

Dr. McKeown was a native of Alexandria, Va., and had been an employee of the Department of Agriculture since 1905, when he was appointed veterinary inspector, with headquarters at Omaha, Neb. In 1906 he was transferred to Benning, D. C., in connection with the work at the slaughter house. In 1914 he had headquarters in Baltimore. Recently his headquarters had been transferred to the local office of the bureau of animal industry, but Dr. McKeown spent most of his time in field duty in Maryland and Virginia. His home was at Congress Heights, D. C. His wife and several children are living. Funeral arrangements have not been made.

RULING ON GOOSESKINS.

U. S. to Receive 40 Per Cent Ad Valorem Duty Instead of 30.

"Dressed geese skins covered with down" are no longer "by similitude"—a technical term used in interpreting the tariff laws—"furs dressed on the skin." They become, under the latest decision of the customs service, "down on the skin advanced or manufactured, not suitable for use as millinery ornaments."

This is determined in a new Treasury decision. The government now will receive 40 per cent ad valorem duty instead of 30 per cent.

JURY CONDUCTS INQUIRY INTO MRS. GOULD'S DEATH

Assertion Made That She Was Not Attended by Regularly Licensed Physician.

A coroner's jury this afternoon viewed the body of Mrs. Elizabeth K. Gould at her late residence, 1104 Euclid street northwest, and arranged to assemble at the morgue later in the day and hear testimony in order to enable it to reach a verdict giving the circumstances under which she died. Mrs. Gould, it is stated, was treated by an osteopath during her last illness, and when death occurred it was necessary to obtain a death certificate before the body could be buried.

Under the law, it is stated, the coroner is the only person who has authority to issue such certificates. Statements of Mrs. Gould's last illness, Coroner Nevitt stated, were not such that he felt justified in giving a certificate without performing an autopsy and holding an inquest.

Only licensed practicing physicians, it is stated, are authorized to sign death certificates, and the osteopath who treated Mrs. Gould, the coroner stated, did not possess such authority. Mrs. Gould was the wife of Alfred R. Gould of the bureau of engraving and printing. She died Tuesday night at 9 o'clock. Funeral services will be conducted at the family home tonight at 7 o'clock by Rev. Gore Griffith Johnson, pastor of Immanuel Baptist Church, under the auspices of Columbia Chapter, No. 15, O. E. S., of which Mrs. Gould was a member.

Tomorrow the body will be taken to Brooklyn, N. Y., the former home of the Goulds, and interment will be in Greenwood cemetery Saturday morning.

For Purchase of Lincoln Birthplace. The purchase by the government of the Kentucky homestead where Abraham Lincoln was born is provided for in the bill by Representative Johnson of Kentucky, which passed the House yesterday without a dissenting vote. The feature of the debate was a speech by Representative Cannon of Illinois, who gave several personal reminiscences of President Lincoln. He took occasion, also, to denounce reformers. He declared that Lincoln was not one of that sort.

Husbands, Attention!

Money left to widows becomes so often the prey of the unscrupulous that no wise and thoughtful husband will neglect the provision in his WILL of a competent, experienced and responsible trustee to protect his wife's interests after he becomes unable to do so.
